He stood up, surveying the neighborhood. Behind him the girl lifted her voice in protest.

"No, Philip, no! I won't leave you." He shook his head in silent contradiction, frowning, but not frowning because of the girl's mutiny. He was a little puzzled by a vague impression.

The hansom was traversing a street in Old Brompton, a quaint, prim byway lined with dwellings singularly old worldish even for London. He seemed to know it subjectively, to have retained a memory of it from another existence.

Calendar's cab was drawing perilously near, and he was debating was hard for him to adjust his perwhether or not they should alight at once and try to make a better pace afoot when the decision was taken wholly out of his hands.

Blindly staggering on, wilted with weariness, the horse stumbled in the shafts and plunged forward on its knees. Quick as the driver was to pull it up, with a cruel jerk of the bits, Kirkwood was caught unprepared. Lurching against the dashboard, he lost his footing, grasped frantically at the unstable air and went over, bringing up in a sitting position in the gutter with a solid shock that jarred his very teeth.

For a moment dazed, he sat there blinking. By the time he got to his feet the girl stood beside him, questioning him with keen solicitude. "No." he gasped, "not hurt-only

"I was detained-by business," responded Brentwick briefly. His gaze, weary and wistful behind his glasses, rested on the face of the girl on the threshold of his home, and the faint, sensitive flush of her face deepened. He stopped and honored her with a bow that, for all his fantastical attire, would have graced a beau of an earlier decade. "Will you be pleased to enter?" he suggested punctiliously. "My house, such as it is, is quite at your disposal. And," he added, with a glance over his shoulder. "I fancy that a word or two may presently be passed which you would hardly care

Be one of the party. Take the trip that you will enjoy far in excess of any you have ever taken. Enter now. Get in before the race starts. Select a hustling campaign manager, just as any political candidate would do, and get your friends working for you. Do this, hustle for yourself, and you will be rewarded by the trip that will teach you what books cannot. Privileges and courtesies have been secured especially for the Daily Silver Belt's guests.

Not a listless moment will be spent there, the myriad attractions constantly corruanding the attention of the observer. Without fatigue one can cujoy the variety of seeing and studying.

The educational value of the exposi tion will be great. As its name implies, it was designed to exploit resources of the United States and Canada, that were acquired when these young countries stretched their spheres of influence and pushed their frontier lines to some of the few remaining virgin fields of trade and commerce. If the visitor to the fair seeks information regarding Alaska he can find out everything there is to learn about it by a few hours study in the Alaska building.
